Building a Stress Free Project through Vendor and Product Manufacturer Involvement

[New
Members](#)

Speaker: Steve Jackson

As we advance the building industry to become more environmentally friendly, construction materials become increasingly complex and difficult to work with. Lead time for materials coupled with more time consuming application process could throw off schedules if vendor/manufacturer involvement is not taken into account during the pre-construction phase of the project. Steve Jackson will walk through the stakeholder/vendor relationship as well as share several horror and funny stories of "Jobs Gone Wrong."

Steve Jackson is the General Manager of Western Colloid Inc. Steve is involved in all aspects of WCI which specializes in the manufacturing of roofing and asphalt materials. WCI maintains three manufacturing facilities located in Northern California, Southern California, and Texas and distributes products throughout North America, Latin America and the Pacific Rim. Steve, a graduate of UCLA, is a General Contractor and PMP who grew up in the construction industry. Steve has been involved in the management of building projects ranging from housing tracts to commercial and mixed use buildings. Steve currently resides with his wife and two children in San Clemente, CA.
